being held by the Palestinians—is yet another outrageous example of the way peace processors accept a false moral equivalency between murderers and the innocent people they target.

Trump Gives the Palestinians Another Opportunity to Choose Peace

By Jonathan S. Tobin

If it works, President Donald Trump would deserve the Nobel Peace Prize he covets but almost certainly will never receive. His 20-point plan to end the war in Gaza, which was publicly accepted by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at a White House meeting on Sept. 29, is based on some breathtaking assumptions about the future.

But if it did work, then it would not only mean that Israel would have achieved its two main war goals: the release of all of the remaining hostages held by Palestinian terrorists and the elimination of the Hamas terrorist organization in the Gaza Strip. It would also provide yet another opportunity for the Palestinian Arabs to choose peace and to end their century-old war on Zionism that has brought them nothing but death and destruction.

Do they want peace?

Like the other peace initiatives the Palestinians have been offered over the past decades, the problem is that it's by no means clear that they regard a chance to end their long war against the Jewish presence in the land of Israel or even the latest chapter of it that began two years ago as a desirable outcome. As long as their national identity is inextricably tied to the conflict against the Jews, then no plan—no matter how fair or potentially beneficial to their future—will wind up working. In the absence of an acceptance that their struggle to erase Israel is finished, nothing is going to change.

In addition to that, Trump's scheme can only succeed if there really is a body of nonpolitical Palestinian technocrats available to run Gaza who are not tainted by a belief in Israel's destruction. If that happens, it also means that we are about to witness a sea change in the political culture of the Palestinian Arabs that is hard to imagine, coupled with an equally unlikely reform of the corrupt Palestinian Authority that hopes eventually to take over control of the Strip.

It will also require the global community and the United Nations to adopt policies to advance the cause of peace, rather than enabling the perpetuation of the century-old Muslim and Arab war on Zionism.

On top of that, it is based on the idea that a "Board of Peace" chaired by Trump and composed of world leaders like Tony Blair, the former British prime minister, will have the will and ability to fairly supervise the creation of a "new Gaza" dedicated to co-existence rather than continuing to construct a terrorist fortress.

And, of course, it's also dependent on the good behavior of Hamas terrorists—the combatants who were not present in Washington.

Its leaders will have to surrender not just their arms and the control of the coastal enclave that they've had since 2007. It will also compel the Islamist group and the vast number of Palestinians who agree with their genocidal goals to give up their faith-based ideology that compels them to keep fighting for the elimination of Israel, regardless of what happens to them or how many of their own people are killed as a direct result of their strategies and tactics.

If all that happens, then the 20-point plan provides a path for Israel to achieve its main goals in the war started by the Hamas-led invasion and attacks in southern Israeli communities on Oct. 7, 2023. That is why Netanyahu had no choice but to go along with Trump.

Nevertheless, certain elements of the plan are bitter pills for Israel's government to swallow.

The release of 250 terrorists currently serving life sentences in Israeli prisons in exchange for the immediate release of the remaining 48 Israeli hostages—both those alive and those whose bodies are still

Then there is the way that the plan trusts in the desire of these mythical apolitical Palestinian technocrats to build a Gaza dedicated to providing its residents with decent lives, as opposed to serving as a launching pad for the next edition of the jihad against the Jews.

The notion that the International Stabilization Force envisioned by the plan can police Gaza or ensure that it won't be a threat to its neighbors, including Egypt, requires another enormous leap of faith. After all, it could also be used as an opportunity for those who hate the Jewish state to set in motion a train of events that might lead to the outbreak of the next violent Palestinian attempt to destroy Israel.

That Netanyahu was forced by Trump to apologize to Qatari Prime Minister Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al Thani for Israel's airstrike on Hamas leaders residing in security and luxury in the Gulf state, expressing "deep regret" and pledging never to violate its sovereignty again, was both humiliating and deeply wrong. Trump's willingness to believe in the fairy tale that the Qataris are a force for peace, rather than the primary funders of Islamist hate around the world, is an astonishing blunder by the president. It calls into question his judgment and the motives of some of his advisers, like Mideast envoy Steve Witkoff, who are compromised by their financial ties to Doha.

Despite all of that, the plan's demand for the immediate release of all of the hostages and the prospect, even if it is entirely theoretical, of a Hamas-free Gaza was more than enough reason for Netanyahu to suspend disbelief and do as the president bade him.

Trump's judgment is far from perfect, as his stand on Qatar makes obvious. That nation's involvement in this scheme is a red flag in and of itself. This is, after all, the government that owns and runs Al Jazeera—the most influential news outlet in the Arab and Muslim world, as well as a primary source of Hamas propaganda—and is the primary funder and host of the Muslim Brotherhood and Hamas.

Still, Trump has also made clear that if Hamas doesn't agree to and abide by all 20 points in the new plan, Israel will be free to "finish the job" of destroying the terrorists in Gaza City where they still hold sway. What's more, the plan for creating a "new Gaza" will be implemented in the parts of the Strip currently occupied by Israel even if Hamas won't go along with it.

There would be no reason to trust virtually any other player on the international stage to ensure that an agreement with terrorists isn't flouted by them. The United Nations and its agencies are fatally compromised by their ties to Hamas and sympathy for the cause of Israel's elimination. European nations—the supposed friends and allies of Israel—now unilaterally recognizing Palestinian statehood in order to reward Hamas and undermine Israel also remain untrustworthy.

As the world learned in the years that followed the signing of the Oslo Accords in September 1993, President Bill Clinton and his foreign-policy team were prepared to turn a blind eye to Palestinian violations of its terms, as well as to the obvious indications that they viewed Israel's concessions of territory as merely a gift that allowed them to prepare to continue their quest for its destruction on more advantageous terms. The same was largely true of the George W. Bush, Barack Obama and Joe Biden administrations.

But as the most pro-Israel president in the history of the modern Jewish state, Trump has earned the trust of those who care about it. And so, there is good reason to believe that, his mistaken ideas about Qatar notwithstanding, he will keep his word to hold the Palestinians and Hamas accountable.

At this moment, it is once again possible—as it was at every other point in the history of the last century when the Palestinians could have chosen peace—to imagine success.

To do so, however, means forgetting everything we know about the Palestinians and a society informed by Islamic ideas about the impossibility of accepting the idea that non-Muslims can be allowed to rule lands once possessed by Muslims. The continuation of the conflict is not a failure on the part of the Israelis to compromise or to take “risks for peace.” Rather, it is a function of the Palestinian understanding that they are perennial victims and the necessity to go on sacrificing generations of their children on the altar of an eternal quest to rid the Middle East of a state whose existence contradicts jihadist principles.

That is why all previous efforts to build peace have failed. All the billions in investment and foreign aid that have poured into Gaza, as well as Judea and Samaria, have not created a constituency for peace. The pragmatic assumptions of the diplomats that created the Oslo process, and those of more transactional figures like Trump, have always foundered on the fact that this conflict is about Islamist faith and not a dispute over real estate.

But no matter how foolish those assumptions may be, Trump has given the Palestinians one more exit ramp from a war that continues to devastate them. To think that they will embrace that opportunity is unmoored from a realistic assessment of their political culture and recent history. And if they fail to do so, we know that most of the world will blame Israel and not the Palestinians, as has happened every previous time they have rejected peace.

Decent people should pray that the Palestinians will finally wake up from the nightmare ideology that has led them down the path of bloodshed for a century. That would mean an end to their suffering, as well as freedom for the hostages and a respite for Israel. Yet no one should be surprised if that doesn’t happen. If, or rather when, the Palestinians return to terrorism, then Trump must keep his word and back Israeli efforts to destroy Hamas and also double down on his campaign to rid American education of the woke antisemitism that has surged since Oct. 7.

As the world should have learned long ago, the real path to peacemaking is about more than crafting theoretical plans to end conflicts. The will to enforce such schemes, instead of winking at more Palestinian violations and promises to continue the war, serves as the true test of statesmanship. (JNS Sep 30)

The Jewish TikTok Plot By Abe Greenwald

Anti-Semitism has a fascinating ability to commandeer the entirety of one’s thought process. When Jew-hating takes hold of you, not only does the Jew become the cause of all your problems; his evil handiwork can be seen in the most banal circumstance.

This makes anti-Semitism a merciless condition, as the Jew-hater can never give up the hunt for evidence of Jewish malfeasance. Anti-Semitism is the comprehensive, round-the-clock work of decoding reality to fit a fantastical script.

Take what happened online over the weekend. On Friday, after addressing the UN General Assembly, Benjamin Netanyahu met with some American social-media influencers and journalists in New York City and was asked about the very online, anti-Israel far right. Here’s the essence of his response:

They’re not any different from the woke left, I mean, they’re insane.... We have to secure that part of the base of our support in the United States that is being challenged systematically. A lot of this [anti-Israel propaganda] is done with money. Money of NGOs, vast money of governments.... We have to fight back. How do we fight back? Our influencers.... We’re going to have to use the tools of battle. The weapons change over time. You can’t fight today with swords. That doesn’t work very well. And you can’t fight with cavalry. That doesn’t work very well.... But we have to fight with the weapons that apply to the battlefields in which we’re engaged. And the most important ones are on social media. And the most important purchase that is going on right now is? TikTok. Number one. And I hope it goes through because it’s consequential.

If your mind hasn’t been hijacked by anti-Semitism, it’s clear that Bibi stated nothing more than the obvious: Anti-Israel social media has an outsize effect on public discussion owing to the monetary investments of foreign organizations and governments. Several independent investigations have revealed as much. And among the many anti-Western propaganda elements of TikTok’s algorithm is the promotion of anti-Israel and anti-Semitic content. So, yes, Netanyahu expressed “hope” that TikTok gets sold to Americans.

But if the Jew-hating parasite has taken hold of your faculties, you see all sorts of nefarious activity in Bibi’s comments. “Imagine any other national leader speaking to Americans like this,” posted one X user with more than a quarter-million followers. “Oh, you can’t actually. Because no other nation thinks they have a right to dictate what we say or how we feel.” This anti-Israel zombie believes “I hope” means “I dictate.”

Auron MacIntyre, a writer for Blaze Media, reposted the above and added his own bit of nutty commentary: “Love or hate Israel, as an American you should find this deeply insulting You’re sending billions of dollars a year to a foreign leader who openly brags about his plan to influence politics in your country[.] You are paying him to violate American sovereignty.”

On it went. Conspiracy theory after conspiracy theory, until all the Israel-haters ended up with the same conclusion: The U.S. is pushing China to sell TikTok because Israel demands it.

This, in the end, proves Bibi’s point: Social media is full of insane Israel-haters whose voices are artificially amplified by outside money. Chinese divestiture from TikTok would be good for Israel, the U.S., and information security in general. But for anti-Semites, the sale would be yet more proof of Jewish control. ## Charlie Kirk z”l’s May 2, 2025 Letter to PM Netanyahu

Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

One of my greatest joys as a Christian is advocating for Israel and forming alliances with Jews in the fight to protect Judeo-Christian civilization. Most recently, I am proud to have taken over Ambassador Huckabee’s show on TBN where we continually support Israel and the Jewish people. As Muhammadism spreads into Western societies, it’s critical that Jews and Christians stay united in the effort to contain and roll back radical Islam and Sharia law. I regret to report that anti-Israel and antisemitic trends are at record levels on social media. These negative sentiments then flow downstream into college campuses and even seep into the conservative MAGA community.

My team and I have spent months analyzing these trends and debating ideas that could help you and your country push back against these disturbing developments. Anti-Israel sentiment can undermine American support for Israel. The purpose of this letter is to lay out our concerns and outline potential remedies. Everything written here is from a place of deep love for Israel and the Jewish people. I think it’s important to be brutally honest with those you love. In my opinion, Israel is losing the information war and needs a “communications intervention.”

I started to compose this letter to you on Easter. I should have been focused on my family, but I was getting bombarded with messages about the Israeli army making it difficult for Christians to access church in Jerusalem on Easter. At the time, I did not see any official statements pushing back on this narrative. It was frustrating because pro-Israel surrogates like me should not be in charge of fact-checking every piece of anti-Israel misinformation that pours into social media. It wasn’t just Easter. On my recent campus tours, half the questions I get are about Israel and they’re all negative.

I often spend half my time on these campus tours defending Jews and Israel which I’m proud to do because I love Israel and love the Jewish faith. I spent endless hours with Dennis Prager over the years studying the Torah. Sometimes, it feels like I’m defending Israel in public more than your own government.

My experience on college campuses matches a recent Harvard Harris poll which reported 48% of 18—24 year old Americans support Hamas over Israel. Even in young MAGA circles, Israel is losing support. We are getting huge crowds of 4,000—5,000 students on some of my college tours. My campus visits are becoming like a rock concert atmosphere filled with conservative patriots. Yet, on these campus visits, I'm constantly confronted with:

- "Israel is an apartheid state."
- "Why does Israel conduct ethnic cleansing?"
- "Why is America subsidizing Israel's genocide against the Palestinian people?"
- "Is American aid helping to subsidize Israel's free health care?"
- "Israel and the Jews are running U.S. foreign policy."
- "Israel and Jews are responsible for 9/11."
- "Defending Israel is not in our U.S. national interest."
- "Why is Israel trying to drag us into a war in the Middle East?"

Above are just a sampling of the negative Israel/Jewish comments and questions I confront on college campuses. I'm accused of being a paid apologist for Israel when I defend her; however, if I don't defend Israel strongly enough, I'm accused of being antisemitic. I know you've got a seven-front war and my kvetching pales in comparison. But I'm trying to convey to you that Israel is losing support even in conservative circles. This should be a five-alarm fire.

I'm often asked, "Why is Israel killing so many innocent civilians in Gaza?" I know Israel goes to great lengths by dropping flyers and even calling civilians to clear out of areas about to be bombed. I know Israel posts maps showing which areas should be evacuated. I know that Hamas uses civilians as human shields. But 90% of the younger generations get their news from social media and podcasts and there is very little pushback or fact-checking by the Israeli government and/or pro-Israel supporters in the media (especially social media).

I strongly suggest Israel NOT always depend on "subcontracting" their information war efforts to surrogates in America. Mr. Prime Minister, I urge you to REVAMP your information warfare strategy from top to bottom. Sometimes, the impression is given that Israel thinks everyone hates them so why care about winning over hearts and minds? If there's any truth to this impression, I urge you to consider that social media and podcasts are where you fight for the hearts and minds of the younger generation. Obviously, all this negative Israel propaganda on social media easily translates into pro-Hamas "Free Palestine" sentiment on many college campuses.

Here are some unsolicited recommendations my team and I suggest if you're open-minded to a communications reset:

- 1) For starters, you need a rapid response media team. President Trump does this very effectively on social media with his own account and his White House Rapid Response 47 team. The President has strong fighters like Stephen Miller and Karoline Leavitt who battle the press every day. Honestly, I don't even know if you have a press secretary. You are an eloquent defender of Israel, but you need a team of information warriors out there pushing back every day. There's also hundreds of millions of dollars raised by private pro-Israel groups. Some of this money should be directed into creating pro-Israel ORIGINAL homegrown content. Next, promote this content on Israel-operated social media channels and websites. Use some of these funds to start the Israel Truth Network (ITN).
- 2) I strongly recommend putting together a team of pro-Israel experts who can fact-check misinformation in real time from Israel. Israel needs to take the lead in this effort—no more dependence on subcontractors. Israel never asks for American troops because Israel does its own fighting. I suggest the same approach for the information war. You lead and people like me will follow and provide supplemental support. If you're open to revamping your communications strategy, my team and I are happy to assist.
- 3) You need something perhaps like an "Israel Truth Network" (ITN) which can include social media channels and a one-stop source of information website where, for example, all the negative Israel questions I get can be thoroughly debunked. I would love to refer students to such a website. This website could also be a conduit to groups like Hillel and Jewish educators like Dennis Prager. There can be links to books, podcasts, media personalities, and pro-Israel thought leaders. The website can be a place where Judeo-Christian leaders and groups can share information and form closer alliances in the fight against Islamic fundamentalism. ITN social media can post pro-Israel pro Judeo-Christian video clips, breaking news and articles. ITN could potentially be a news aggregation site for all news pertaining to Israel and Judeo-Christian efforts to preserve Western civilization.

4) Have you considered inviting some of the released hostages to go on a speaking tour in the U. S.? This could be very effective messaging. These hostages can talk about how Gazan civilians not once offered any empathy or compassion. President Trump referenced this lack of humanity when some released hostages visited the Oval Office. This was effective messaging. When impactful messaging clicks, keep it going. Also, these hostages and all your spokespersons should be arguing it's Hamas that is committing genocide on their own people by using civilians as human shields and storing weapons in schools, hospitals, etc. That information drips out in the regular media but is almost nonexistent on social media.

5) Maybe interview regular Israelis on the streets asking them what they love about their country. Interview Jews, Israeli Arabs, Druze, orthodox, secular, etc. Ask Israelis what they wish the world knew about Israel. Ask them to respond to examples of misinformation on social media. This could be an entire social media PR campaign called, "Dude, you got us wrong!" Interview Israelis from all walks of life.

Let Israelis explain in their own words how Israel is a pluralistic society, a free country with elected leaders unlike the surrounding authoritarian Arab nations. Why not show how your hospitals take care of wounded terrorists? Why not show clips of Israel dropping flyers from airplanes warning Gazan civilians to get out of harm's way? It would have been nice to see an Israeli plane with a Star of David arrive in the U.S. full of supplies after a hurricane. Has Israel offered any assistance to the U.S., insofar as technology to protect our border or with the missile defense shield President Trump has discussed? These are examples of effective messaging showing Israel as a close ally of America. Consumers of social media are aware of the billions in supplies we send to Israel, but they're less aware of what America gets in return. You and your team need to make the argument on social media that Israel is a great friend of America and is vital to U.S. national security. Israel needs to better portray itself as a member of "Team Humanity." Israel needs to establish a baseline of her identity. To run an effective messaging campaign, you need a clearly defined message. This message should be homegrown from Israel. In other words, create original content from Israel. Videos and visuals feed social media. Keep these edited clips short—under one minute—and post the best ones on the Israel Truth Network (ITN). Don't rely on non-Israeli social media influencers to create all these clips. Create them yourselves and influencers (surrogates) like me can promote this ORIGINAL work and refer people to your social media and websites. Be proactive—take the lead. Bottom line is Israel needs to learn to fish (i.e., create your own content) and be more self-reliant when it comes to your communications strategy.

6) Iran: Israel could do a better job explaining the Iranian threat. Among the many conservatives who support Israel, there is a concern that America could become entangled in a quagmire in Iran. My generation grew up with disasters in Afghanistan and Iraq. We were promised there were WMDs in Iraq which proved to be a lie. Our generation was also lied to by the governments of Israel and the U.S. that COVID vaccines were safe and effective. Israeli intelligence missed the boat on October 7, but we're asked to trust Israeli intelligence 100% that Iran is on the cusp of obtaining nuclear weapons. Young conservatives are very skeptical of government proclamations. We don't fully trust intelligence assessments. Right now it seems like Israel is primarily relying on Americans to make the case for attacking Iranian nuclear sites. These arguments get a lot of blowback in MAGA circles. Other than you, Mr. Prime Minister, I see very few Israelis making their case in the media, social media or podcasts. Many agree with you (myself included) that Iran should not get nuclear weapons. At the same time, I share the concern that America will get sucked into another endless war costing thousands of American lives. Where are the Israelis who are arguing their case to win over public opinion? Israel should be making its case 24/7 on social media including long form (English-speaking) podcasts and social media channels and website(s) such as a Rapid Response Team and ITN.

7) A paradigm shift is needed in how Israel presents itself to the world, especially on social media. Perhaps the best way to convey my thoughts here is to think of Israel as a political candidate (in this case a younger woman who grew up on social media). Who is this candidate and what does she stand for? Right now there's essentially a massive negative ad campaign spreading on social media. These negative ads are defining this candidate. Political campaigns face these challenges all the time. Many of the PR challenges Israel faces should be looked at through the prism of a political campaign. Like any campaign, the first task is to define the candidate.

Right now there is not a "one-stop shopping" resource where younger people can learn about this candidate. Every candidate has a website and social media. It would be political malpractice to omit these tools. Sorry for the brutal honesty, but Israel's approach to social media is "PR malpractice." Your "candidate" should list all the toughest questions she gets on the campaign trail with detailed expert responses (add footnotes) on her ITN website and use social media to explain her platform on a daily basis. These responses become part of Miss Israel's "platform" where her positions and values are explained. Like any political campaign, you need surrogates who can articulately promote this candidate's platform and identity. Right now Israel's identity is being fabricated by those who hate her by a barrage of misinformation in the media—especially social media. Fake news becomes real news if there's not effective pushback. When a candidate is hit with negative campaign ads, the effective response is for the candidate to PERSONALLY respond to these attack ads. A candidate doesn't just rely on surrogates to get the truth out. One of Israel's biggest most fundamental problems is typically your pushback is in a 3rd person voice. I do the "3rd person" voice all the time as I attempt to defend the candidate, Israel. But I don't live in Israel so I'm more like an attorney defending a client. Israel, the client, also needs to defend itself. I wish I had a "1st person" source of information I could reference where students and Israel skeptics could learn more about this client called Israel. You need a one-stop shopping resource where Israel's platform and beliefs can be spelled out. You need more Israeli surrogates speaking out on behalf of their candidate. At the moment, you have some wonderful non-Israeli surrogates speaking on behalf of a candidate that has not defined herself—especially when it comes to social media. I know it's common to think that social media, especially TikTok, is a waste of time. I thought similar a year ago. But TikTok algorithms have changed. I have increased my followers on TikTok from approx. 1 million to 6.6 million in the last year. We get BILLIONS (with a "B") views on TikTok. My campus tour last Fall and this Spring have received approx. 5 BILLION impressions. Elon Musk is a good friend to Israel so X offers a great opportunity to make inroads on social media. Israel should not sit back and allow its enemies to define her. A recent Pew Research poll showed 53% of Americans now have an unfavorable view of Israel, up from 42% three years ago. U.S. support for Israel is precarious right now. A new media strategy is urgently needed. I understand social media as well as anyone in the world. From my vantage point, Israel has retreated from social media without a fight. How are you going to win over younger generations if you're starting out in retreat on social media? Younger generations use their TV's for Netflix—not the evening news. Narratives for younger and even middle-aged people are fought now on social media. Mr. Prime Minister, stop this retreat—get in the information war fight! The front lines of this information war are on social media. Other than a few guerrilla warfare operations, there's very little Israel created content. I saw that Israel has increased its Hasbara budget by 20x times which is great news. There's also hundreds of millions of dollars raised by private pro-Israel groups. Some of this money should be directed into creating pro Israel ORIGINAL home grown content. Next, promote this content on Israel operated social media channels and websites. Use some of these funds to start the Israel Truth Network (ITN).

To sum up, you should perhaps consider reshaping your Hasbara Department into more of a political campaign headquarters with campaign narrative experts. Hasbara could be the mothership hosting ITN where the messaging campaign can be created and then distributed to all the pro-Israel groups and thought leaders.

Majority of staff in these efforts should be in their 20's and 30's. The older generation alone is not going to win the information war on social media. You need to fill the ranks with young people who grew up with cellphones and social media—not pay phones and TV news. Once the candidate is defined with a platform backfilled with extensive details, then allow the political operatives to take that platform out into social media with an out-of-the-box approach like some of the earlier suggestions. I've seen your IDF spokesman defend Israel standing at a dimly lit podium. This looks like a scene out of the 1970s—like some old Walter Cronkite clips of the TV news. You need to tear down your old ways of communicating and start over from scratch. Create a communications and social media platform that is wired to fight back with the same fierceness and determination as the IDF.

Israel has many Americans and some well-known foreigners who defend Israel which is great. But these are "3rd person" voices. Mr. Prime Minister, you are an eloquent defender of Israel but you don't post very often on social media. Many of your clips are in Hebrew only. Why don't you do more press conferences in Israel in English? Take on some of the tough questions I get bombarded with on college campuses. Where are all the Israeli surrogates? I can't remember the last time I saw an Israeli spokesperson on one of the evening Fox shows other than yourself. ISRAEL NEEDS MORE FIRST PERSON VOICES TO DEFEND HER! How can Israel defend and define itself if you don't even have spokespersons out there fighting back every day? Do you have a press secretary like Karoline Leavitt or defenders like Stephen Miller? If not, I encourage you to go find them! You need more Israeli spokespersons who are effective speakers in the media and on social media.

I know you also have a serious deep state lawfare challenge. My team and I have been fighting the deep state every single day for many years. Maybe a revamped information war strategy can help with your internal fights as well?

Israel has enormous capabilities such as how you orchestrated your beeper bomb operation. Perhaps Israel can use some of that same ingenuity to more effectively fight the information war in the media, especially on social media? Israel is the Silicon Valley of the Middle East. Israel has an abundance of brain power and technological expertise. The question is whether Israel has the willpower to step up its game in this information war. From my vantage point, the status quo is not working. Israel is getting CRUSHED on social media and you are losing younger generations of Americans, even among MAGA conservatives. In my opinion, you are losing the information war which will eventually translate into less political and military support from America. The Holy Land is so important to my life, and it pains me to see support for Israel slip away. Feel free to contact me on my private number below if you would like to discuss this further.

Sincerely, Charlie Kirk (Newsweek Sep 30)
